

Table of contents

Preface by Dr. Eibhear Walshe	I
Acknowledgements	V
1. Introduction	1
1.1. Introductory remarks	1
1.2. Aims and methodological approach	6
1.3. Boland's work seen against Showalter's, Memmi's and Fanon's critical models	11
2. Boland's initial steps as a woman poet	27
2.1. Introduction	27
2.2. The poet as hero set apart from ordinary life	42
2.3. The poet as pilgrim	53
2.4. The poet's affinity with nature	58
2.5. Two kinds of Irish political poems	65
2.6. Commemorating lost heroes	74
2.7. Acceptance and servitude: uncritical representations of women	78
2.8. A dispossessed and submissive female voice	83
2.9. Conclusion	89
3. Boland's reaffirmation of sexual difference	97
3.1. Introduction	97
3.2. Anger and revenge: a 'tirade' against patriarchal representations of women	104
3.3. Ambivalent impulses: a fractured and confused self	110
3.3.1. A split poetic voice in "Anorexic"	110
3.3.2. Ambivalence towards motherhood	116
3.4. Reaffirming sexual difference: the woman's body on the foreground	122
3.5. An experimental language	143

3.6. Conclusion	145
4. Boland's artistic decolonisation	157
4.1. Introduction	157
4.2. Boland's marriage: an "amorous exchange" between opposite factions	164
4.3. A deconstruction of the poetic self	185
4.3.1. Introduction	185
4.3.2. Against the solidification of images in art	193
4.3.2.1. The limits of artistic representations	193
4.3.2.2. A woman who escapes artistic representation	206
4.3.3. In-between womanhood and poetry	222
4.3.4. In-between myth and history	230
4.3.4.1. The benefits of cyclical and monumental time	235
4.3.4.2. A revolutionary place between myth and history	243
4.3.4.3. Out of myth into history: towards the death and erasure of the poetic self	249
4.3.4. Conclusion	261
4.4. An 'authentic' Irish past which cannot be grasped	262
4.4.1. Introduction	262
4.4.2. The dangers of presenting oneself as a spokesperson	264
4.4.3. Silence as a politically effective strategy	284
4.4.3.1. In search of a new language	284
4.4.3.2. Recording the 'unpoetic': Boland's silences and dissonances	287
4.4.4. Conclusion	324
4.5. A more assertive 'marginal' writer?	326
4.5.1. Introduction	326
4.5.2. Boland's mature exile in the US	327
4.5.3. A marriage that endures	339
4.5.4. Boland's reconciliation with Irish poetry	343
4.5.5. A more assertive woman poet	350
4.5.6. A more assertive 'vulnerable' woman poet?	353
4.5.7. Conclusion	358
5. Conclusion	367
Appendix: An Interview with Eavan Boland	379
Bibliography	403
Index	421