

Contents

Introduction to the second edition	7
1 Social theory, capitalism and the urban question	13
Marx and Engels: the town, the country and the capitalist mode of production – Max Weber: the city and the growth of rationality – Émile Durkheim: the city, the division of labour and the moral basis of community
2 The urban as an ecological community	52
Community and society – Human ecology is dead . . . – . . . Long live human ecology!
3 The urban as a cultural form	84
The metropolis and mental life – Urbanism and ruralism as ways of life – 'Real but relatively unimportant'
4 The urban as a socio-spatial system	114
Spatial structure and social structure – Urban managers: independent, dependent or intervening variables? – Housing distribution and class struggle
5 The urban as ideology	152
Henri Lefebvre: the humanist critique of urbanism – Manuel Castells: science, ideology and the urban question – Epistemological imperialism and the new urban sociology

6 Contents

6 The urban as a spatial unit of collective consumption 183

The urban system and the capitalist mode of production – Urban politics and the crisis of collective consumption – Production, consumption and the city

7 A non-spatial urban sociology? 240

Beyond a sociology of the city – The spatial aspect of economic organization – The spatial aspect of social organization

8 From urban social theory to a sociology of consumption 289

The politics of socialized consumption – Consumption sector cleavages and social restratification – Privatized consumption, self-provisioning and the dual society

Appendix A note on the empirical testing of theories 352

Further reading 363

References 369

Index 385